Dear Sid:

Thank you for your kind offer to take a look at my Canon 35mm camera. It probably needs nothing more than a camel's hair brush and/or a drop of oil applied to the right place. The problem I have been having deals with the shutter. I tried a series of time exposures recently attempting to catch some flying squirrels at our bird feeder at night, and the shutter started sticking particularly when I tried to close it.

I would be most grateful if one of your associates could take a look at this camera to ascertain if anything major is wrong. If the problem is major, I would also appreciate your advice on the best place to take it to be fixed.

Many thanks.
